hi- i just found out about the efforts of Quebec Hydroelectric to dig through the beautiful wilderness of the White Mountains to force energy on New England... claiming it is clean, renewable and hydroelectric. Any effort to put in clean and renewable energy would not be pushed like this by a huge ! corporation that needs to destroy untouched land using deceit. The truth is that although it"s name claims hydroelectric energy, which can be clean if it done small, locally and in ways that respect and preserve the life of fish living in the water, this company actually sells most of it"s hydroelectric to big aluminum producing corporations in northern Quebec. For the Northern Pass Project, they"d be selling us predominantly nuclear energy... the most toxic and dangerous form of energy which power plants are trying to trick the public into believing it is clean. While big corporate interests usually do win over the will and best interest of the people, any decision to move forward on this would be made on the backs of our children, grandchildren and the future of all. miriam
